The Local Map Pack Playbook

How a high-value service business earns a place in Google's map pack, turns that visibility into booked consultations, and stops paying for every click.

THE SHORT ANSWER · 60 WORDS

REVIEWED OCTOBER 15, 2026

To compete in Google's map pack, make your Business Profile the most complete and relevant match for each service you sell, earn a steady flow of honest reviews, and support it with a website that has a real page for each service and town. Google ranks local results on relevance, distance and prominence, and nobody can pay for local rank.

How does Google decide who shows up in the map pack?

Google ranks local results mainly on relevance, distance and prominence, and says there is no way to pay for a better local ranking (Google Business Profile Help). Fundamentals win.

- Relevance: how well your profile and site match the search. A category naming the exact service beats a broad one.
- Distance: how far you are from the searcher. You win by being strong enough to rank farther out.
- Prominence: how well known you are, from reviews, links, mentions and site strength.

This is Search Essence Optimization. People search to understand you, not just find you. Make the answer to “can I trust them?” clear, so prospect and business meet in the middle.

What this looks like for home improvement companies

The market is growing slowly, so every job is a share fight. Harvard's Joint Center for Housing Studies projects owner-occupied improvement and repair spending moving from $509 billion in Q4 2025 to $518 billion in Q4 2026 (April 15, 2026). When the pie barely grows, the map pack decides who gets the estimate.

Hide your address if customers don't come to you, and list only towns your crews actually drive to. Finished work, photographed with permission and tagged by town, makes honest local pages easy.

Solar has extra rules. The FTC has said sellers must disclose total cost and financing terms, not overstate savings or tax credits, and flagged "free solar" claims as a scam signal (August 7, 2024). This is not legal advice.

Why are we ranking but not getting calls?

Usually one of four patterns:

- Wrong searches. Ranking for your own name or research terms produces few calls.
- Small circle. Map rank changes block by block. You may top the pack near your office and vanish two miles away.
- Weak answer. Few reviews, no photos or a slow mobile site loses to a more trustworthy competitor one spot lower.
- AI summaries. Pew Research Center found Google users clicked a traditional result on 8% of visits when an AI summary appeared, versus 15% without (July 22, 2025). Seer Interactive, an agency, found brands cited in an AI Overview earned 35% more organic clicks (November 4, 2025). Pages must rank and be quotable.

Step 1: Complete your Google Business Profile

Your profile is the map pack listing. Finish this list, then review it quarterly.

- [ ] Choose the most specific primary category for your main service.
- [ ] Add secondary categories only for services you actually sell.
- [ ] Use your real business name, with no added keywords or towns.

- [ ] Show your address, or hide it and set service areas to the region you truly serve.
- [ ] Add every service with a short, plain description.
- [ ] Set regular and holiday hours.
- [ ] Write a plain description: who you serve, what you do, where.
- [ ] Replace stock images with real photos.
- [ ] Add a UTM-tagged website link (`?utm_source=google&utm_medium=organic&utm_campaign=gbp`). If you use call tracking, make the tracking number primary and your main number additional.
- [ ] Publish a post at least twice a month.

Examples for a home improvement company. Confirm category names in your profile editor.

Profile field	Example for a home improvement company
Primary category	“Roofing contractor,” “Kitchen remodeler” or “HVAC contractor,” not “Contractor”
Services	“Free roof inspection,” “Furnace replacement estimate,” “Window replacement quote”
Photos	Crews, trucks and finished jobs, with the homeowner’s permission
Posts	A recent project by town, storm-season reminders, a plain answer to “repair or replace?”

Step 2: Build a review system you can defend

Reviews are the part of prominence you control most. BrightLocal’s 2026 vendor survey of 1,002 US adults found 47% won’t use a business with fewer than 20 reviews (February 11, 2026). Pass 20, then match the count and recency of the top three in your pack.

Keep it honest. The FTC’s review rule, finalized August 2024, bans fake or AI-generated reviews, buying reviews, incentives tied to positive sentiment, undisclosed insider reviews and suppression (Morgan Lewis, August 26, 2024).

- [ ] Ask every client at a set moment. No gating unhappy ones to a private form.

- [ ] Send a direct link by text or email, with consent, within a day of that moment.
- [ ] Never reward a positive review, and don't let staff or family review without disclosure.
- [ ] Reply to every review within a few days, written fresh. BrightLocal found 50% are put off by templated replies.
- [ ] Answer criticism calmly, once, offline if possible.

For a home improvement company, ask at the final walkthrough. Have the project lead ask in person, then send the link that evening, and ask permission to photograph the finished work.

Fill in your weekly routine:

Item	Your answer
The moment we ask
Who sends requests and who replies
Reviews this month / target
Our count vs top competitor

This is not legal advice; check your licensing board's rules too.

Step 3: Build pages for each service, town and person

Your profile ranks better when your website backs it up: one page per core service, a town page only where you have something real to say, and a bio for each person prospects search by name. Pages that just swap town names help no one.

For a home improvement company, local proof is finished work in that town, local permit rules and common housing problems. Example row, not a client:

Service	Town	Real local detail	Local proof	Common local question	Build?
Roof replacement	Parma	City permit steps, common housing stock, lake-effect snow load	Photos of finished roofs in Parma, crew lead who works the area	“Do I need a permit to replace a roof in Parma?”	Y

Build bios for the owner and the project managers who meet homeowners, with license numbers where required and manufacturer certifications.

Build only pages where you can fill every column. Each bio needs the licensed name, a real photo, the services that person handles and Person schema.

Make every page quotable: a direct two-sentence answer up top, question headings, a short FAQ. Keep content in plain HTML; Vercel found none of the major AI crawlers, including GPTBot and ClaudeBot, render JavaScript (December 17, 2024).

Step 4: Run the 15-minute technical health check

Content can’t rank on a site Google can’t read.

- [ ] Search `site:yourdomain.com`. The count should roughly match your real pages.
- [ ] Check why pages aren’t indexed in Search Console’s Pages report.
- [ ] Run your home page and top service page through PageSpeed Insights on mobile.
- [ ] Check that your top ten pages each have a unique title tag naming the service and place, and one H1.
- [ ] Test schema with Google’s Rich Results Test. Name, address, phone and hours should match the profile.
- [ ] Confirm `robots.txt` doesn’t block search or AI crawlers by accident.

Every failure goes on your fix list.

Step 5: Measure calls and booked consultations, not rankings

Rankings are a means; booked appointments are the result.

For a home improvement company, the booked event is an in-home estimate or inspection, split by trade.

Metric	Where to find it	This month	Last month
Profile calls and direction requests	Business Profile performance
Website clicks from profile	Analytics, filtered by your UTM
Organic clicks and top queries	Search Console
Form fills and calls from organic	Analytics and call tracking
Appointments booked from search	Your CRM or calendar

Cost per booked appointment from SEO = monthly SEO spend ÷ appointments booked from search and maps.

Example numbers, not benchmarks: $3,000 a month producing 15 booked appointments is $200 each. Compare that with bought leads on the same basis. Bought leads start fast and stop when you stop paying; SEO starts slower and keeps working. Many owners do both.

Where do most owners get stuck?

> Seeing the whole map. One search from your desk shows one point. Knowing your rank across your service area takes map-grid data collected repeatedly over time.

> Content and links at scale. Dozens of substantive, compliant pages plus mentions from local press and associations take steady time most owners don't have.

> Keeping proof current. Town pages stay strong only if crews photograph finished jobs and someone files them by town and trade. That habit is hard to build in a busy season.
